Efficiency at the Penitentiaries

This "non-partisan, bi-partisan" control of the penitentiaries that Gov. Morrow planned and inaugurated may work well in theory, but it hardly seems to be proving practical, if what the papers are saying about escapes and other escapades of the convicts at Frankfort is the truth, and there has been no denial of any of them. First was the disclosure of the manner in which convicts were permitted to roam at large from the road-making camp up in Harlan county. That one of them killed Miss Lura Parsons few now seek to dispute.

Then two or three of them up there escaped. Then Wendling, the fiend, who murdered little Anna Kellner and hid her body in a church in Louisville, was caught returning over the walls one night after a date with a lady friend outside. And now, this week, three prominent young murderers were calmly let out of their cells by the guard and then casually saved a few bars off a window and were in a fair way to make their escape altogether when caught by Deputy Sheriffs near Lexington.

Warden Byers, who was imported from up north somewhere by the new administration to humanize the penitentiaries, feebly explains that much of the cause for the various troubles is due to what he says has been "wholesale discharge of experienced personnel and the employment of an entirely inexperienced force throughout." In other words, Byers and his "non-partisan board" kicked out experienced democratic guards and officials to give jobs to good republicans who, he admits are "entirely inexperienced."

And yet the press and the public were repeatedly told that the prisons were not to be the football of politics, but were to be operated under this "super-system, along lines of efficiency, economy and principles of humanity." Perhaps they are, but just what the people of Kentucky are thinking of the "efficiency" of a system that turns out experienced men and replaces them with a force "entirely inexperienced," while murderers from the cell-house roam about the streets at night and unprotected girls are assassinated by prowling road convicts, would not look well in print or get by Uncle Sam's postal regulations just at present.

Jim Allen Says

(In Cincinnati Democrat)
 Tobacco, or no tobacco, that is the question.

There, little tobacco plant, don't cry; you'll be fertilizer by and by. While Harding was making his cabinet in the south, Mrs. Harding was making her wardrobe in the north.

A man who sold his tobacco on the local market at $2 per hundred blamed the low price on his wife for the careless way she cut, housed and stripped the weed, says the Elmwood Outlook.

The Mardi Gras celebration at New Orleans lacked much of its former splendor. The Rex parade was the only one. Alas, poor Comus! We knew him well, but when John Barleycorn died poor Comus fell.

"How to Hold a Husband" is being discussed in the women's magazines. Don't know much about that unless a bear trap is used; but if they want to know "How to Hold a Girl" all they have to do is to send her to this office for a free demonstration.

The newspapers are commenting on the fact that Chicago has a holdup woman who insists upon kissing her victims. But, somehow or other, this practice does not seem new. We have heard somewhere that a kiss from your wife indicates an early hold-up.

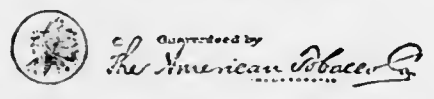

Down in Alabama where the cotton blossoms grow, exists a tender affection between a gander and a blind ox, impelling the gander to lead the ox carefully back to the grazing pasture. Lovely friendship. Almost as touching as the affection of a Kentucky goose for a blind tiger.

IN THE MOVIES

Elaine Hammerstein in her latest Selznick picture "The Daughters Pay," which is being shown at the local theaters today, becomes deeply enmeshed in the web spread by an embittered monomaniac, who in his early years, had been thrown over by her mother.

The story was written by Mrs. Baillie Reynolds, and the screen version was adapted by R. Cecil Smith. Robert Ellis directed the production, which is said to be one of the most sumptuous and lavish in point of settings and costuming that has been released from the Selznick studios.

M'KEE

Robert McQueen, a farmer of this community, committed suicide last week by shooting himself in the heart with a shotgun. He had stayed all night with a neighbor and early next morning he took his shotgun, saying that he was going to kill a rabbit. He only went a few steps out in the road, when they heard the gun fire. When they found him he was dead. He was 51 years old and is survived by a wife and three children. His son, William, who was killed in France, was brought back and buried two weeks before.

OLD-TIME GOVERNORS HAD THEIR TROUBLES

Pleas For Pardon For Offenses
Just As Strong and Hard To Resist As Now

(By Associated Press)

Frankfort, Ky., Feb. 17.—Trial and tribulations of modern day governors are nothing new, judging from letters and other documents in the files of executive papers of early governors of the state. Pleas for pardons in that day were as forceful and as important as today, the files show.

Within two months after he took office on June 4, 1792, Gov. Isaac Shelby was faced with petitions for the pardon of one "Jim Smith, late of North Carolina," who was convicted in Lexington of horse stealing and sentenced to death. Smith, according to letters from Judge Samuel W. McDowell, of the district court at Lexington, Judge John Allen and John Coburn, "did become greatly alarmed when he heard the sentence," and, in the parlance of the modern day crook, "snatched." He told who his accomplices were, and although their names are not mentioned in any of the letters, the writers all state that it is evident that Smith was led into the crime by evil associates and that he had had a good reputation previously and would reform if pardoned.

The date set for hanging Smith, who was confined in the Lexington goal, was set for September 1, 1792, but on August 24 Governor Shelby pardoned him. All of the correspondence in the case is clearly legible although the paper is yellowed with age and marks of the red wax with which the letters were sealed are still plain.

The second case, which bears earmarks of a modern pardon appeal is that of William Cox, also known as "Devil" Cox and "Devil Will" Cox. Cox was tried on a charge of "making hard and passing money," otherwise known as counterfeiting in that he attempted to pass ten counterfeit Spanish milled dollars on a merchant in Danville. He was pardoned June 10, 1794, but not before a score or more of petitions and letters had reached the governor.

The case of Cox evidently stirred the bluegrass region thoroughly, for hundreds of names of men, some of them known in history, were signed to the petitions asking executive clemency. Letter after letter implored Governor Shelby to pardon Cox and in every one great stress was laid on the fact that he had a wife and six children "who were greatly grieved" and that a pardon would be followed no doubt by reformation. Mrs. Sally Cox, the wife, apparently was very active, for in every instance the petitions and letters spoke of her as asking the pardon, before the name of her husband was mentioned.

Cox, however, either did not reform or else some of his old crimes came up to face him, for in the same file dated three months later is a beautifully written copy of a warrant for Cox and a requisition on the governor of Kentucky for his return to Knoxville, Tenn., on the charge of counterfeiting. This was a United States indictment and was signed by William B. Blount, governor of the Southern Territory of the United States.

Penalties in the early days of the commonwealth were extreme and there was no means between the sentence inflicted and a pardon. The case of Basil, a negro belonging to Samuel Waddle of Bourbon county, wherein the negro was sentenced to death for stealing $75 from the home of one James Thomas, is related in the files of Governor Shelby. Basil was valued by the district court at Lexington at 75 English pounds and officials of the court, although agreeing that the negro was guilty, recommended that he be pardoned inasmuch as $65 of the stolen money had been recovered. The conviction was obtained June 30, 1792, and the day of his death set for July 30, but on July 25 Governor Shelby signed the pardon.

With the RED LINE round the top

More farmers are wearing Goodrich Rubber Footwear today than ever before.

The reason for this tremendous increase in users is simple—Goodrich wears longer than other footwear, and farmers have found it out. Naturally, when a man buys a pair of Goodrich "Hi-Press" and they last so much longer and are so much more comfortable, and so materially cut down that big footwear bill—he's going to tell his friends.

More and more farmers are finding out that Goodrich won't leak, peel or come apart—it can't, for it is made in One Solid Piece—that's the Goodrich way.

Look for the Red Line round the Top when you buy. 60,000 dealers are now selling Goodrich.

LYNCH IS NOW A MODEL MINING TOWN

(By Associated Press)

Lynch, Ky., Feb. 16.—This city is less than four years old and has a population of approximately 7,000 persons, concrete streets and roads, a department store that compares favorably with those of much larger cities, a $300,000 hotel, a $1,000,000 bank, the largest coal tipples in the world, an 85-bed hospital and a church of every denomination represented in Eastern Kentucky. In the opinion of R. B. Clayton, secretary of the Harlan County Coal Operators' Association, it will be the model mining camp of the country within two more years.

Sitting at the head of the valley of the Poor Fork of the Cumberland river, 40 miles above the point where it joins the Clover Fork at Harlan to form the main stream, the town is the base of what is said will be the largest coal operation in the Cumberland mountains when it is completed.

Model cottages for miners and officials are being erected as rapidly as possible. These homes have every modern convenience and are rented at the rate of $2 per room for houses which are not heated from the central power plant and at a figure based on the rate of $2 per room plus the cost of radiation for homes heated with steam.

The only general store in the community rivals in its appointments and stock any department store in the largest cities of the country.

A $300,000 hotel has been erected on the highest point in the valley. It is equipped throughout with all modern conveniences.

Concrete roads and streets are being built as rapidly as possible the roads leading to the various points where the veins of coal in the mountain are expected to be opened.

Pays His Prescription
Has Powerful Influence
Over Rheumatism

Mr. James H. V. suffered for years with rheumatism. Many times the terrible disease left him helpless and unable to work. He finally decided, after years of ceaseless study, that no one can free one from rheumatism until the accumulated poisons, commonly called uric acid, are dissolved in the joints and muscles and expelled from the body.

With this idea in mind, he consulted physicians. Made experiments and finally compounded a prescription that quickly and completely banished every sign and symptom of rheumatism from his system. He freely gave his discovery to others who took it, with what might be called marvelous success. After years of urging he decided to let sufferers everywhere know about his discovery through the newspapers. All druggists have been appointed agents for Allen's in this vicinity with the understanding that he will freely return the purchase price on the first ten bottles to all who state they received no benefit.

PAYS HIGH TRIBUTE TO BEREA COLLEGE

Gifted Young Writer of Louisville Tells of Its Great Work For Mountain Youth

Miss Ida Cozart, of Louisville, who made many friends here during her stay in Richmond in charge of Children's Home Society, made a visit to Berea College, and wrote interestingly of it and its work in a letter to the Stanford Interior Journal. What she says of it will be of much interest in Madison, of course. She wrote as follows:

The aim of the founders of Berea College, over half a century ago, was "To promote the cause of Christ." In doing so they wanted especially to reach the boys and girls of the Southern Appalachians, who were greatly in need—the struggling boys and girls eager to grasp opportunities for rising in the world. With such an aim the college could not fail, so we may well understand why Berea has grown and flourished through the changing years since its organization.

It seems that the school has at no time lost sight of its high purpose, if we may judge from the boys and girls who have gone out from there. Berea's task today, as set forth by its new president, Dr. William J. Hutchins, is this: "Within the bounds of our enlarging equipment to put within the reach of each of those mountain boys and girls who need it most, the opportunity of finding and forming friendships with the host that is in the world; the opportunity of finding one's self in one's work; the opportunity of finding one's self in friendship and in toil to the friendly power of the world, emphasizing the desire of the leaders of Berea College to offer to each student the chance to bind himself consciously in friendship and in the toil to the 'friendly power behind the world.'"

He speaks further of the task as being one of giving each student who comes the opportunity of forming ennobling friendships with "the best that is in the world of nature," so that the stars and the trees, the birds and mountains may each unfold to him something of its friendly meaning. The college wants to make each student more efficient in his chosen life work, whether it is raising chickens, cows or corn; whether it be typewriting, teaching or some other profession; and as he becomes master of his chosen work, to find himself in it—to realize the joy of self-expression—and to relate his task to the world enterprise.

The student body today numbers nearly 2,000. Boys and girls are taken from the mountainous sections of seven Appalachian states. The school is so crowded that the management is careful to admit only boys and girls who truly "thirst for knowledge," and have the opportunity to enter no school other than Berea. As a result, the college is composed of purposeful, earnest, enthusiastic workers. The whole atmosphere is pervaded by a spirit of joy—joy in working toward a higher, richer life, in getting away from the Father of dullness and mediocrity.

The school has resolved that "When we think of this great no child shall be shut from Berea school on Kentucky soil whose because of his poverty. It has high purpose. It is to 'From the pledged that it shall 'continue to the cause of Christ,' we are more keep the path from the cottage hopeful of Kentucky's future, to the college wide and open." Yet the task is tremendous, is the business of the teachers to Would that all our schools might help the ones "farthest down" to work with this constant aim, share with them their best visions. Then would our state soon rise—the vision of a God who hates from its low position in the eddies and mere words and for national scale of our country. We malism and sectarianism, a God wish Berea Godspeed.
